Criticizes Government Methods

Pre-World War II German police shocked the world with their use of dogs to control people.

Their secret police organization closely resembles our CIA, even though our "S.S." wear "ivy league" accessories.

EVANSDALE — To the Editor: The United States of America is beginning to resemble pre-World War II Germany more and more each Observer - type warfare, where we show the natives how to kill each other for our benefit, is becoming very popular. The only problem with this is that too many are playing the game.

The only difference between Russian motives and ours is they want us and we don't know it.

It is obvious that in order to take us, first the Communists must make it look like our government is smashing some small country to pieces. This is what consolidated the allies, when Hitler and Mussolini conquered Czechoslovakia and Ethiopia at the start of World War II.

If we are stupid enough to do the same thing in Cuba or Viet Nam, then the Russians may turn up with some interesting allies, such as England or France.

We aren't mad at Cuba, only Castro. How about telling the Cuban people that we want to shake hands but Castro is goofing us up, and if they would send him back to Russia, we will send them all a new pair of shoes and enough chili and wine to fiesta for a month.

We need some good sharp public relations men in government offices.
